It is full of excitement

By Merideth

Hilda's parents were both loving and hardworking. They set a good example to Hilda. Papa encouraged children to make the best out of a bad situation. Mama worked hard all day long to take care of everyone. Hilda learned to be content and thankful of what she had.

After Hilda moved from Minnesota to Washington she became envious of her cousin Thora since she had so many pretty dresses and a big house with modern equipment. Hilda was angry and ashamed of her own house. Still she felt joyful when she found a brook where she could talk to God. Later on Hilda found out that Thora was actually envious about her because Hilda's family was always happy, unlike her own. Hilda and Thora made peace together at the end. They also became sisters.

Although Hilda had struggle over some problems throughout her life in Washington, she finally found the simple truth of joy. That was to have good relationship with God, family and friends. Hilda learned to forgive others and live a happy life with God.

Good book for building Christian character

By AceAcademy

A well-written book for the middle-elementary grades. It is a part of the 4th Grade A Beka Curriculum. The story development from the title to conclusion is good for those beginning to write book reports. Bonus: Christian character development through struggle and resolution of envy. A good family read, too.
